JavaScript callback syntax does not return global variables I'm trying to make an AJAX call to a server, and it works fine, but there is a problem. The callback function is just not returning the variables I've used as global variables. var test = 100; function testFunction() { var some = 50; function test() { console.log(test); } test(); } When I run this, the console.log gives me "undefined", which is what I would expect. Why is this? Why can't I use these variables? A: This test(); isn't a function call, it's a function declaration. Thus, you're not calling testFunction, you're simply declaring a function named test. The function it creates does not have access
