All of us have had to cope with the withering criticism of others as we try to get our point across. From the teacher who doesn't think your work is up to the college exams to the friend who never likes the way you choose to live your life, it can be a major pain. That's why I always keep a close eye on what people think of what I do. I want to make sure that I never stop asking myself this question: 'Am I doing the right thing? Now, this doesn't mean that I constantly feed people information. That's like letting everyone into your house, your thoughts, and your feelings. But I do take time to ask how I'm doing in helping people find a more fulfilling way of life. I do want to know and make sure that I am living up to the expectations you have of me because this will define me. I know a guy who has a house on top of a mountain. He's a very popular guy and people often ask him about the difference between the house on the mountain and the houses on the plain. He has an interesting answer to this question. He says that the difference is that the people who live on the mountain are always being rewarded for the things they do, and those on the plain are being punished. If you're being rewarded for your actions, you're a person who is more interested in the satisfaction you're getting and the impact you're making. But if you're being punished, you're a person who is more interested in saving face, and you're more worried about the opinions of others. Whenever you wake up, take a moment to consider the effect that you've had on the lives of others. We all have this ability to make an impact on the lives of others. So ask yourself how you're doing. Is your impact only going to be one of destruction, or is it going to be one of creation. If it's the latter, you are really a very special person.
