Have you ever just felt like you and your eyes are on the same page as part of a game of golf or tennis? I have. And have observed the instantaneous healing with research I did when I first felt this way. The eyes are quicker than the fingers. They can detect and analyze objects and spots over 150 feet away, and can tell movement in darkness. The eyes see color, and can distinguish between brilliant light and shadowy light. This is not rocket science. But, for some reason, the eyes are rarely given respect in the medical profession. Doctors treat vision first, then come the other senses. It would be nice to know what doctors believe and what they don't. I know so little. Could it be that doctors are afraid of new technology? Think about this. Right now, in the practice of medicine, doctors are faced with certain problems. Some people have abnormal eyesight and this makes a doctor think a cataract is developing in that eye. Who knows? The problem is, doctors have to be 100 percent right. They do not have the luxury of testing or checking. If the doctor is wrong, the patient may go blind. I guess I should feel sorry for the doctors. That's why
