Two incidents of vandalism occurred at the museum, resulting in damage to two of the exhibits. The first incident occurred on Friday. "A pipe bomb was found hidden in the fuse box on the second floor, but there was no detonation of the device," museum spokeswoman Jennifer Miller told the Palm Beach Post. "At approximately 6:30pm on Friday, May 12, a pipe bomb was discovered in the Museum's Fuse Box, an internal electrical device with which employees routinely check the Museum's fire alarms. The Museum's fire alarms immediately activated and all staff evacuated safely from the building, with no injuries reported. The Museum is not currently in session, but will remain open through Memorial Day weekend and is currently undergoing renovation. The Museum's full-time staff and security team are working with the Palm Beach County Sheriff's Office Bomb Squad to safely remove the bomb and defuse it. The Museum will update its patrons with information regarding the closure of the Museum on its website and social media outlets." On Saturday, May 13, approximately 12:10pm, a surveillance camera in the Museum's Ma-Yelle Building captured video of a male subject removing a pipe bomb from a cart and Cellular and molecular mechanisms underlying the pathological changes in striatal neurons in Parkinson's disease remain unclear. We recently showed that a mutation in the Rab5a gene causes autosomal recessive Charcot-Marie-Tooth disease type 1E, a degenerative neuropathy characterized by the selective degeneration of motor neurons in the central nervous system. Here, we assessed whether a defect in the Rab5a gene causes a selective degeneration of striatal neurons. We generated Rab5a mutant mice in which the wild-type Rab5a gene was replaced by a gene encoding a cysteine-to-alanine mutant protein. These mice exhibited normal neuroanatomical structure and normal motor function, but their striatal neurons progressively degenerated, accompanied by the development of a motoric defect. This degeneration of striatal neurons in the mutant mice was characterized by the abnormal accumulation of lysosomes, autophagosomes, and ubiquitin-positive inclusions and by the disappearance of the acetylcholinesterase-positive neurons.
