New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio speaks at the AARP 2012 2012 Greater New York State Conference on Aging and Fiscal Reform at the Jacob Javits Convention Center in New York City, U.S. on November 8, 2012. REUTERS/Mike Segar The city estimates the new tax will raise $350 million over five years. The program, which would affect households earning more than $500,000, would be funded by fees on private-college tuitions and new admissions taxes on private-school tuition. Republican New York state Assembly Speaker Sheldon Silver, who opposed the plan, called it a "Robin Hood" tax on the rich that would hurt the state's most vulnerable. But the Democratic mayor said it was essential to pay for universal pre-K, which is seen as a solution to urban problems such as violence, unemployment and high drop-out rates. "Our children deserve the most loving and safe early childhood they can have," de Blasio said at a news conference. "Pre-K for all, we call it, is an investment for the future," he added. The program would cost $12.6 billion over 10 years, which would be paid for by the state and federal governments. The state would levy a 1.7 percent payroll tax, according to a budget proposal presented to the legislature. Private-school tuition would be taxed at 1.75 percent, up from.75 percent. The new tax would also apply to private-college tuition. New York City is home to private colleges, including Ford 2d92ce491b
