The patient is counting on them. They're working hard for them. And they deserve to be taken care of when they need it," Dr. David M. Metered dose inhalers (MDIs) are well known in the art and usually comprise a canister containing the drug to be dispensed and a metering valve, operated by a user, for releasing the drug. A separate dispenser is used for each dose of drug to be dispensed. MDIs are used in the treatment of bronchial asthma and other conditions in which a patient is administered a medicament in an aerosolised form. However, they are not well suited for use in relatively small, portable applications, such as hand-held cellular telephone or Personal Digital Assistants (PDAs).
