At the heart of the project is a rare genetic disorder called microvillous atrophy (MVN), in which intestinal epithelium disintegrates and villi shorten. The villi are the fundamental foot-stalk that protrude from the intestine, helping it to acquire and absorb nutrients from the gut. Though not a fatal condition per se, it is characterized by significant discomfort and a high risk of malnutrition. Our laboratory has studied MVN because we thought the disease might be amenable to novel therapies that target the underlying causes of intestinal dysfunction. More recently, we discovered that MVN results from a genetic mutation in the actin cytoskeleton (ACTA1) in humans, and mutant mice. We think that the MVN condition is caused by an abnormal cytoskeletal architecture, and we therefore believe that targeting the abnormal cytoskeletal architecture can provide novel therapies for this condition. The specific goals of this project are to characterize the molecular mechanisms by which ACTA1 affects epithelial cell morphogenesis. In addition, we will translate our in vitro results to the animal system, for the in vivo validation of our model. Two specific aims will be pursued:

1. To determine the mechanisms of cell contraction and shape changes during intestinal morphogenesis in MVN and ACTA1 null cells. We will test the hypothesis that early defects in cell-

Turn the dough out onto a lightly floured work surface. Shape the dough into a smooth ball. Grease a large mixing bowl, place the dough in the bowl, and cover with plastic wrap. Let rise for two hours, or until doubled in size. 5. Preheat the oven to 350 degrees F (180 degrees C).

Turn the risen dough out onto a lightly floured surface, and press down to deflate. Coat a large baking sheet with vegetable oil spray. Place the dough in the baking sheet, and slash the top of the dough with a sharp knife into a lattice pattern. 6. Bake for 20 to 25 minutes, or until golden brown.

Remove from the oven, and let cool completely on a cooling rack. Cut into ten 3-inch (7 cm) squares. Christmas is a time of giving. And in my mind, in order to be a good host, we should give to others as much as we can. Here are some of the things I hope you will remember to give to a friend, neighbor, relative, or even yourself this Christmas. 1. A gift card. You can give a gift card to a favorite restaurant, a hobby shop, an art gallery, a bookstore, etc. You can also give a gift card to a friend, or anyone you have not been able to spend time with in a while. It could be a dinner, a cup of coffee, or a day of painting or sketching. 2. A gift card with no expiration date. Remember, all those things you buy for yourself will last forever.
